It is 7pm in the shade of the great Sundari tree on the banks of the river. Dengi boats splutter from all directions into the half-light of the shallows, carrying people exhausted by the heat of the day.

They settle themselves on the steps of the Ghat, drink tea and await the ceremony of Ganga Aarti.

The sound of the primordial conch breaks the silence. The oil lamps are lit and soon pendulous fiery candelabras send plumes of smoke heavenwards, prayers are recited and the faithful begin to sing in praise of the goddess.

Om jai gange mata maiya jai gange mata ...

The mind travels, and salience is conjured. In the darkness, a tiger roars.

The veil is thin,
The knife is sharp.
Don’t step too far into the night,
Lest you find it torn apart and are cast upon the battlefield.

We are all the vessels of the Colosseum, and nothing is as it seems.

So speak your untruths but know what awaits you on the mountain.

The future is yours, dear listener...

The Mountain is dedicated in loving memory to
